Hi,

We are a course of 3 occupational therapists, currently completing our BA at the Hogeschool Zuyd in Heerlen, the Netherlands. We are interested to write our dissertation about the MOHO (or one of the assessments) in connection with ICF (international classification of functioning).

But currently we are still looking for a concrete topic for this dissertation. Possibly, you already know some interesting related studies which could be the foundation of our work. We are looking forward to any suggestions related to these topics.

Kind regards from Germany.

Yours,

K. Widrinski

August 23, 2006 5:02 pm

Dear Kathrin and all-

MOHO is aligned with several concepts of the ICF. The upcoming edition of the MOHO text book (4th edition), which will be released in April 2007, includes a chapter on this topic. It is important to consider that while some concepts are aligned, not all are aligned. This partially is related to the different purposes of ICF and MOHO. While ICF is concerned about health and health impacts, MOHO is concerned with participation in occupations and occupational adaptation. Eddie Duncan, a therapist in the UK, has also done some work on this (Eddie- please join in with your opinions!).

If you would like more information, please contact me directly. Also, there an article that compares the ACIS with the previous framework, the ICADI: Haglund, L., & Henriksson, C. (2003). Concepts in occupational therapy in relation to the ICF. Occupational Therapy International, 10 (4), 253-268.

Hope this helps!

Jessica
August 23, 2006 7:10 pm

G'day,
You would probably be aware of this already but the March edition of the Australian OT journal has an article looking at the relationship b/w the ICF and OT models of practice, one of which is MOHO cheers

Michael